JUDGING

We are committed to following the highest standards in awards judging. The guiding principles for judging the Awards include independent from organisers, integrity, objectivity, impartiality, avoidance of conflict of interest, and transparency.

➤ Independent Judging Panel

An independent panel of judges with distinguished backgrounds assesses the entries to decide the winners. The judging board has members drawn from diverse fields such as non-profit organisations, academia, sustainability advocacy, professional bodies, industry networks, and media to enrich the judging process. The judging panel is entirely independent of the organisers to maintain the highest possible neutrality and objectivity.

The panel of judges evaluates all submissions following rigorous criteria. Information about the judges is available on the website.

➤ Judging Process

Entries will be evaluated in three rounds:

First Round: In this round, an initial evaluation will be carried out by experienced ESG Analysts. The qualifying entries will then proceed to the judging round (second round).

Second Round: Judges will determine the finalists for each category. Each category is expected to have 8-12 finalists. The names of the finalists will be announced around mid-December.

Third & Final Round: In the third round, also the final round, the judges will take a closer look at the entries and will decide the winners.

➤ Winners

Each category is likely to have three awards – Gold, Silver and Bronze. The winners will be announced in February 2021 at an Awards Ceremony cum Gala Dinner event in Singapore.

➤ Judging Criteria

Judges will be using a broad set of parameters to evaluate each entry. Some of the parameters may apply to specific award categories, while others may be more commonly applied. We recognise that integrated reporting is a journey and different organisations may be at a different point in their journey. That is why it is not mandatory to meet the entire criteria to be a winner. However, the winners would have demonstrated that they are ahead of their peers when tested against these overall parameters.

In general, judges will be using the following parameters:

1. How strong is the link between the company's reported integrated strategies and activities and its business strategy?
2. Whether the company uses internationally accepted integrated reporting frameworks such as GRI and Integrated Reporting. Also, how well the organisation uses other integrated frameworks such as the SDGs, TCFD, CDP or other sector-specific guidelines.
3. How the company identifies, describes and addresses its most significant or material impacts and issues.
4. How the company engages with stakeholders to build a more credible integrated approach.
5. Whether the report provides a clear description of goals and targets and how the progress is measured.
6. Whether the report explains how value is created for the company or its stakeholders or both.
7. What is the degree of useful disclosure the company provides through the report?
8. How comfortable the company is in disclosing its failures, shortcomings, underperformance or sharing the negative news.
9. Whether there is an independent assessment of the company's reported performance. Examples of independent assessment may include but are not limited to:
 - a) Views of internal or external stakeholders' incorporated in the integrated report in the relevant sections.
 - b) Views expressed by an important external stakeholder or an external stakeholder panel included in the report.
 - c) Relevant certifications disclosed in the integrated report.
 - d) External Assurance provided by independent assurance providers.
